Contents

General editors' preface ix
Author's acknowledgements xi

Introduction 1
Introduction to the second edition 3

Section I: What is autonomy? 7

1 The history of autonomy in language learning 9

1.1 Origins of the concept 9
1.2 Autonomy and self-access 10
1.3 Autonomy and learner training 11
1.4 Autonomy and individualisation 12
1.5 Autonomy and interdependence 14
1.6 Why autonomy? Why now? 17
1.7 The two faces of autonomy 23

2 Autonomy beyond the field of language education 26

2.1 Educational reform 27
2.2 Adult education 36
2.3 The psychology of learning 38
2.4 The philosophy of personal autonomy 49
2.5 Autonomy in language learning and its sources 56

3 Defining and describing autonomy 58

3.1 Dimensions of autonomy 59
3.2 Versions of autonomy 62
3.3 Measuring autonomy 65
3.4 Autonomy and culture 69

4 Control as a natural attribute of learning 73

4.1 Self-management in learning 74
4.2 Learner agendas in the classroom 79
4.3 Control of psychological factors influencing learning 81
4.4 The seeds of autonomy 91

5 Dimensions of control 92

5.1 Control over learning management 92
5.2 Control over cognitive processing 100
5.3 Control over learning content 112
5.4 Describing the autonomous learner 117

6 Conclusion 119

Section II: Autonomy in practice 121

7 Fostering autonomy 123

8 Resource-based approaches 127

8.1 Self-access 127
8.2 Tandem learning 131
8.3 Distance learning 133
8.4 Self-instruction 136
8.5 Out-of-class learning 138
8.6 The effectiveness of resource-based learning 141

9 Technology-based approaches 145

9.1 Computer-assisted language learning 146
9.2 The Internet 148
9.3 The effectiveness of technology-based approaches 152

10 Learner-based approaches 154

10.1 Learner development and language learning 156
10.2 Learner development and autonomy 157
10.3 The effectiveness of learner-based approaches 161

11 Classroom-based approaches 163

11.1 Planning classroom learning 164
11.2 Evaluating classroom learning 168
11.3 The nature of control in the classroom 172
11.4 The effectiveness of classroom-based approaches 173

12 Curriculum-based approaches 176

12.1 The process syllabus 176
12.2 Examples of curriculum-based approaches 178
12.3 The effectiveness of curriculum-based approaches 183

13 Teacher-based approaches 185

13.1 Teacher roles 185
13.2 Teacher autonomy 187
13.3 Language advising 191
13.4 Teacher education 193
13.5 The effectiveness of teacher-based approaches 196

14 Conclusion 197

Section III: Researching autonomy 199

15 Research methods and key areas of research 201

15.1 Teachers' research 201
15.2 Key areas of research 203

16 Case studies 213

16.1 Case study 1. Out-of-class learning 213
16.2 Case study 2. A self-organised language learning community 218

16.3 Case study 3. The discourse of language advising 222
16.4 Case study 4. Self-directed learning in the classroom 226
16.5 Case study 5. Language acquisition in autonomous classrooms 230
16.6 Case study 6. What do good independent learners do? 235

17 Conclusion 240

Section IV: Resources 241

18 Resources for research and practice 243

18.1 Books, journals and newsletters 243
18.2 Conferences and workshops 244
18.3 Professional organisations 244
18.4 E-mail lists 246
18.5 Web sites 247
18.6 Bibliographies 247
18.7 Self-access centres 248

References 249
Index 278