CONTENTS

List of figures xi
List of tables xii
Acknowledgements xiii

Introduction 1

Outline of the book 6
Note 9

1 The Westminster model and the UK political system before Brexit 10

1.1 Westminster, British politics, and the BPT 11
1.1.1 What's in a name? The Westminster model and British politics 12
1.1.2 The BPT, historical inheritance, and institutional persistence 16
1.2 The normative debate on the Westminster model 21
1.3 Lijphart's analytical framework: discussion and adaptation 23
1.4 The Brexit process as a case of constitutional and political change 26
1.5 The difficult Europeanisation of the UK political system 28
1.6 Referendums in the UK 32
1.7 Conclusions 36
Notes 37

2 Understanding the Brexit effect 39

2.1 Introduction 39
2.2 The Brexit process: periodisation and analytical issues 40

2.3 Europeanisation and the weakening of the Westminster system 42
2.4 Back to Westminster? The impact of exiting the EU 45
2.4.1 Dimension 1: elections and the party system 46
2.4.2 Dimension 2: executive–legislative relations 47
2.4.3 Dimension 3: centre–periphery relations 49
2.4.4 Institutional change and stickiness 50
2.5 Research design and data 51
Notes 52

3 Westminster preserved: Elections, party system, and the absorption of the Brexit shock 53

3.1 Introduction 53
3.2 Before Brexit: the British party system and voter alignment – from stability to turmoil 55
3.3 The institutional pillar of the two-party system: SMP and electoral legislation at other territorial levels of government 58
3.4 The Brexit effect on electoral alignments and the party system 62
3.4.1 Cleavage politics: are there new alignments and Brexit identities in the place of party identities? 64
3.4.2 The classification of party systems 65
3.4.3 One or many party systems? The importance of horizontal, vertical, and functional divisions 66
3.5 Data and analysis: Brexit as an electoral shock 67
3.5.1 Electoral alignments and cleavages 68
3.5.2 Party system classification 74
3.5.3 Multiple party systems? 76
3.6 The weak bases of the party system 76
3.7 Conclusion: a reaffirmed two-party game, with a very peculiar Conservative predominance 79
Notes 80

4 Westminster challenged: The constrained dominance of the executive 83

4.1 Introduction 83
4.2 Executive–legislative relationships before Brexit 85
4.3 Rebellions and government defeats in the House of Commons 88
4.3.1 Rebels and the EU issue 88
4.3.2 After the Brexit referendum: the beginning of the withdrawal process 90
4.3.3 From the 2017 general election to the end of May's premiership 92
4.4 Taking back control: Parliament and the strains of Brexit 96
4.4.1 The interpretation of the standing orders and parliamentary procedure 96
4.4.2 Controlling the business of the House of Commons 98

4.4.3 The role of the House of Lords 100
4.4.4 Johnson's government and the final battle with Parliament 101
4.5 Conclusions: the 2019 general election and the role of Parliament post-Brexit 103
Notes 105

5 Westminster reasserted: A unitary but disunited state 107

5.1 Ethnonational identities, party politics, and institutional reforms before Brexit 109
5.1.1 "Anglo-Saxon" centre and "Celtic" peripheries 109
5.1.2 The rise and consolidation of centre–periphery politics (1969–99) 110
5.1.3 Devolution as process and the contested territorial constitution (1999–2015) 112
5.2 The impact of Brexit on the centre–periphery dimension 115
5.2.1 The Brexit kick-off: a dis-United Kingdom (2015–16) 115
5.2.2 Brexit and devolved self-rule: between expansion of powers and (temporary) recentralisation 119
5.2.3 Brexit and devolved shared-rule: a constitutional clarification 123
5.2.4 Brexit and the territorial constitution: "unitary and decentralised" 128
5.3 Brexit, secessionist backlashes, and ethno-territorial tensions 130
5.3.1 Scotland: struggling for a second chance 131
5.3.2 Wales: firmly in the UK 134
5.3.3 Northern Ireland: between republican galvanising and loyalist anxiety 135
5.4 Conclusions: a unitary but disunited state 137
Notes 138

6 Understanding the Brexit strains during the Covid crisis 140

6.1 Political parties in the aftermath of Brexit Day: looking beyond "self-evident truths" 140
6.2 Executive–legislative relations: Johnson's difficult leadership amidst the pandemic 143
6.3 Centre–periphery relations: recentralisation and contestation 145
6.3.1 The Internal Market Act 2020: Brexit against devolution? 146
6.3.2 Further backlashes in the Celtic peripheries 148
6.3.3 Latest reforms 150
Notes 152

7 Conclusions: British politics after Brexit 153

7.1 How Westminster changed during the Brexit years 153
7.1.1 Elections and the party system 154
7.1.2 Executive–legislative relations 156
7.1.3 Centre–periphery relations 158

7.2 Beyond the domestic domain 160
7.2.1 Sovereignty and interdependence: taking back control? 161
7.2.2 Going comparative: challenges to British democracy in perspective 164
7.3 Westminster strikes back: British democracy after Brexit 169
Notes 174

Bibliography 175
Appendix 206
A. List of interviews 206
Appendix 209
B. Timeline of events 209
Index 212